

Interview Talk Sheet

Designed for Long-Form Interviews with Modular Repurposing

This format is designed so each section functions as a standalone content segment while also flowing naturally into the next topic.

The “fence posts” are scripted, but the discussion is authentic. It maximizes time spent on the things that matter the most.

Humans crave promises, information, and fulfillment. This is designed to give them all three.

Interview Structure

Each topic follows the same four-step conversational rhythm:

1. Attention Purchase – Make a compelling statement or ask a provocative question that “buys” the audience’s attention. Remember! It has to be something you make good on or it’s nothing more than an empty promise that destroys trust.
2. Time Purchased – The strength of the hook results in an estimated time of discussion to frame the idea and keep interest while setting up the payoff.
3. Fulfillment – Deliver a clear insight, practical example, or memorable story that satisfies the promise made by the hook and builds credibility, accomplished inside of the time purchased.
4. Segue – End with a fulfillment statement that is a natural bridge that opens the door to the next topic, creating a smooth, continuous conversation while allowing each segment to stand alone when repurposed.

Interview Planning

To make your time exponentially effective...

Focus on the Attention Purchase. The topics will be general. As an expert, you’re a content pro on the subject, which is why you’re here. You’re speaking from a plethora of experience and skill, so the space in between will be a piece of cake for you, but the hook needs to be perfect.

Together, we’ll work on the hook that is the most optimized for attention and fulfillment, “buying” the most amount of talk time from our audience.

Consider the fulfillment. Arguably, more important than the hook. It’s the fulfillment of the informational value prop. This is where trust is won or lost. It is easily the most important factor in the ability to maintain attention over time.

Bring specificity to the segue. Conversations tend to trail off... or end abruptly. By having a definitive “end cap” to the fulfillment you create a resolution – like at the end of a song or dance – that the human mind craves.

Excited to try this with you!

Replace any observation with your insights.

TOPICS

Content Creation

Topic 1 – Why Most Content Fails

Attention Purchase

"Most people don't have a content problem. They have a thinking problem."

"No amount of pretty can fix stupid."

Time Purchased

15–30 seconds

Fulfillment

Explain that content is simply the expression of ideas. Weak ideas produce weak content regardless of camera quality or editing. The best creators spend more time developing perspectives than producing videos.

Segue

"Once you know what to say, the next challenge is actually creating content consistently."

Topic 2 – Consistency vs. Quality

Attention Purchase

"Perfection is responsible for more failed creators than bad cameras."

"It's like starting to work out. Everyone wants to rent a key fob when what they really need to do is just drop and give me 50. Get started. Then improve."

"Polishing a terd only gets you a shinier terd. You're not fooling anyone."

Time Purchased

20–30 seconds

Fulfillment

Discuss how consistency builds skill, audience trust, and algorithmic momentum. Explain that quality comes from repetition rather than waiting until everything is perfect.

Segue

"If consistency matters that much, then systems become almost as important as inspiration."

Topic 3 – Content Systems

Attention Purchase

"The biggest creators don't create more. They waste less."

"Your hurdle to being a content creator isn't usually your insight. It's a lack of repeatable, efficient systems."

Time Purchased

20 seconds

Fulfillment

Describe batching, templates, reusable workflows, and content repurposing. Explain how systems reduce decision fatigue.

Segue

"Creating content isn't the goal. The goal is creating value."

Topic 4 – Authenticity

Attention Purchase

"Authenticity isn't saying whatever comes to mind."

"People make irrational buying decisions. What you do in your personal time probably shouldn't matter... but it does."

Time Purchased

15–20 seconds

Fulfillment

Explain authenticity as consistency between values, actions, and communication. Authentic creators filter ideas rather than fabricate personalities.

Segue

"And when authenticity consistently creates value, it becomes a business."

Business & Entrepreneurship

Topic 1 – Starting a Business

Attention Purchase

"Entrepreneurs have plenty of passion. They fail because they solve problems nobody has."

"Businesses are like babies. Everyone thinks theirs is the cutest. But most babies look like aliens by design."

Time Purchased

20–30 seconds

Fulfillment

Explain that successful businesses begin with solving valuable problems instead of pursuing interesting ideas.

Segue

"Once you've found a problem worth solving, the next challenge is building something sustainable."

Topic 2 – Risk

Attention Purchase

"Entrepreneurs aren't risk takers. They're risk managers."

"Risk isn't optional. How you handle that risk... is."

Time Purchased

20 seconds

Fulfillment

Discuss calculated experimentation, testing assumptions, reducing uncertainty, and learning before scaling.

Segue

"Managing risk becomes easier when your business has repeatable systems."

Topic 3 – Leadership

Attention Purchase

"The biggest bottleneck in most companies is the owner."

"Owning a business makes you the de facto leader. Doesn't mean you're any good at leading."

Time Purchased

20–30 seconds

Fulfillment

Explain delegation, trust, hiring, and transitioning from operator to leader.

Segue

"Leadership eventually leads to culture, and culture determines whether growth lasts."

Topic 4 – Long-Term Thinking

Attention Purchase

"Short-term wins often create long-term losses."

"The enemy of scale is shortsighted thinking and being in the weeds too much."

Time Purchased

20 seconds

Fulfillment

Discuss customer relationships, reputation, reinvestment, and building businesses designed to outlast trends.

Segue

"One of the best long-term investments any business can make is content."

Content Marketing

Topic 1 – Selling Without Selling

Attention Purchase

"The best marketing rarely feels like marketing."

"People buy you. So who are you and why should we trust you?"

Time Purchased

30 seconds

Fulfillment

Explain how education, entertainment, and storytelling build trust before a sales conversation ever happens.

Segue

"That trust doesn't happen because of one viral video."

Topic 2 – The Content Flywheel

Attention Purchase

"One great piece of content should never die after one post."

"Spend less time overanalyzing every little thing that goes out and just go for it."

Time Purchased

20–30 seconds

Fulfillment

Describe repurposing content into articles, clips, newsletters, podcasts, social posts, and emails, extending the life and reach of every asset.

Segue

"Repurposing works because audiences consume information differently."

Topic 3 – Audience Building

Attention Purchase

"You don't need millions of followers. You need the right thousand."

"A highly focused audience of a few thousand can be more profitable than a million randos."

Time Purchased

20 seconds

Fulfillment

Discuss niche audiences, trust, engagement, and serving a clearly defined community rather than chasing vanity metrics.

Segue

"Serving the right audience starts with understanding what they actually need."

Topic 4 – Measuring Success

Attention Purchase

"Views are one of the least important metrics in marketing."

"Getting views is easy. Making new creators look capable is hard."

Time Purchased

20–30 seconds

Fulfillment

Explain the difference between attention metrics (views, likes) and business metrics (qualified leads, conversations, sales, customer lifetime value). Emphasize aligning content goals with business outcomes.

Segue

"Ultimately, content marketing isn't about creating more content—it's about creating more opportunities for meaningful engagement."
